Description

Learning about and understanding the multicultural classroom can broaden the view of future teachers in many ways as they interact with the realities of today's classroom.

Teachers today will confront a diverse classroom, which will demand flexibility, but also skills in strategy development to master these differences and use them to enrich the learning environment for students and teacher alike. Learning about diversity and intercultural competence is an opportunity to develop one's self to be an empathetic teacher and educator. An internship throughout the semester in a bilingual primary school allows the students to put these learned skills to practice.

In this practical module, students will have the opportunity to observe, analyze, plan, implement and evaluate lessons.

All courses are taught in English.
